PowerFilm [2] has signed a marketing deal with the Boy Scouts of America and will exhibit solar-powered tents at the group's annual Jamboree this summer in Virginia.

The marketing deal between the BSA and the Ames-based maker of flexible solar panels will result in PowerFilm's solar chargers and other products being available for sale at scoutstuff.org, the official Boy Scout web site.

PowerFilm's 7.5 Watt Foldable Charger sells for $99.99

The first PowerFilm product on the scout web site is a 7.5 Watt Foldable Charger that operates at 15.4 volts and 0.45 amps. The charger was developed in collaboration with the Boy Scouts. It is 10.375 inches wide and unfolds from a 3.5-inch pack to 35 inches in length. It can be used to recharge AA batteries or to charge small electronic devices, including cell phones or GPS units.

Earlier this year, PowerFilm received approval to produce a line of solar chargers under the Boy Scout's Be Prepared brand for sale on Amazon.com.

PowerFilm also makes portable solar power products for the military, as roofing components and for recreational uses including camping and as auxiliary power for small vehicles, such as golf carts.
